Stellar Announces New Customer Service Technician

Garner, Iowa -- Stellar Industries, Inc. announces Kyle Freesemann as the newest addition to the customer service department. He joins Stellar with over 6 years experience as a mobile field service technician for a large construction equipment dealer in Mason City, IA.

Freesemann will serve as a technical customer service representative with responsibilities to support Stellar parts sales as well as to provide technical assistance for all Stellar product lines. Freesemann says, "I'm most looking forward to the opportunity to work with customers more directly." He adds, "I come from a farming background so I have always been around and working with heavy machinery. I also enjoy being able to help people and am looking forward to the new challenges and tasks that I will encounter day to day."

"Kyle's personality, knowledge, and his field service experience as a mechanic has allowed our team to continue our efforts of better service to our distribution and our end users," says Dave Schwichtenberg, customer service manager. Schwichtenberg continues, "He has quickly become an invaluable asset to our team."

Freesemann is a graduate of West Hancock High School and the Wyoming Technical Institute in Laramie, WY where he studied diesel mechanics, high performance engines and fabrication and applied service management. He resides in rural Britt, Iowa with his wife, Sarah, and enjoys spending time with family and friends at the lake, hunting, riding his Harley and spending time on the family farm.
